the group began building a red sandstone theater. This, however, was never finished. The community lacked a meeting house, and the bishop advised the theater group to suspend building until the meeting house was first completed.

Other communities in the valley were not long in forming theater groups, and these soon began touring the circuit between the valley towns. Typical announcements in the Wave noted that, on the night of March 23, 1889, The Midway Dramatic Society would give a performance in Van Wagoner's hall. The play, Michael Earl, the Maniac Lover, and the farce, Wanted, A Young Lady, would be presented. At the same time the Wallsburg Dramatic Society, a new amateur group, would their descendants have kept alive the tradition. Some of the first members includes James Shanks and Elisha Averett, leaders; Joseph M. Smith, A. Y. Duke, Dick Danielson, Lon Smith and Orrin Smith were early members. Robert Duke, Robert McKnight and Will Thacker, snare drummers and John Duke Jr., bass drummer. Descendants of these performers and others have kept the band alive during nearly a century of performing at holiday celebrations and patriotic occasions. More recent members of the group include Lon Smith, Seymour and Sterl Duke, Earl Dayton and Lowell Johnson.

The Heber Brass Band was also organized very early by the early settlers. It was organized with ten members and Thomas Perry who played a piano was the leader. Their pictures, Roger Horrocks, Robert McKnight, Thomas Perry, Alexander Fortie, Fred Clegg, Joseph A. Murdock, Dick Duke and Dr. Glanville, was taken with a pioneer old-folks party group in 1883. This band as the Martial Band was noted for
